The Careful Cat

WHEN Calvin Cat was anywhere near a mirror, he was very, very careful not to break it! When he walked near a ladder, he made sure that he walked past it, not under it. Just for luck, he'd knock on wood and throw salt over his shoulder and wish on the new moon. He never stepped on sidewalk cracks, only in the squares, and he spent half his time searching in the grass for four-leaf-clovers.

The number ELEVEN, however, was Calvin's biggest superstition. His friends thought it was a great joke, the way he carried on....

"Hey, you'd better watch out," they kidded him, when he tried out for football practice. "The coach has you slated for the uniform with NUMBER ELEVEN!"

So, just to make sure such a disaster did not occur, Calvin didn't try out for the team.

His parents suffered, too, from their son's superstitions. They had been looking all over town for a new house, a house just the right size, just the right color, just the right location. At last they found exactly what they were looking for! It had evergreen trees in the front yard and white birches in the back yard. It had a white picket fence and a brass door knocker and a corner fireplace to curl up in front of. It had everything!

"Calvin, guess what!" Mr. and Mrs. Cat meowed happily when he walked in the door from school. "We've finally found it!"

"The perfect house for us?" Calvin knew at once that only such an event could have made them this overjoyed. "Wonderful! How soon do we move?"

"Next week," they told him. And so, after much packing, the moving van arrived the following week. He hopped into the cab of the truck with the driver. He'd been so busy packing that he'd had no chance to go see the house. He was terribly excited—until the van drew up in front of a darling, little house inside a white picket fence. "Evergreens!" said Calvin. "And white birches! And a corner fireplace!" Then he added in a shriek that nearly choked him, "And NUMBER ELEVEN!"

Yes, their new house's address was 11 Hemlock Hill Drive!

"You didn't tell me about this!" howled Calvin at his mom and dad.

"But Calvin, we never realized you'd be so upset," they began, but their son didn't hear them. He was far away down the block, shouting back over his shoulder, "You can live there! Not me!"

And that was how Calvin Cat came to be homeless, and that is also how he came to meet Rufus Rabbit. Rufus was homeless, also, as Calvin found out when he met him one night inside a hollow log during a rainstorm. It had been pitch black inside the log when Calvin felt the fur bump against him.

"Who's that?" asked Calvin.

"It's I, Rufus Rabbit!" came the reply.

In the darkness the two chatted. When they discovered they were both homeless, they decided to be friends. And then they found out they had something else in common—their superstitions! So right away they became best friends!

"Everyone else always teases me about avoiding ladders and stuff," said Calvin. "It'll be nice having a pal who understands."

"Same here," Rufus agreed. "Tomorrow let's spend the day searching for four-leaf-clovers, okay?" And so, in the blackness of the hollow log, they made their plans for friendship.

Sunrise, however, ruined everything! Calvin woke up and smiled at the white, fluffy rabbit he'd been speaking to during the night, but had never seen till now. But did Rufus smile back? NO!

"Don't move!" he squealed frantically. "Don't come near me!"

"What? Why? Wh—"

"I forgot to tell you that my very worst superstition is black cats! If you cross my path, I will have bad luck always!"

"Nonsense!" said Calvin, who was as black as a coal mine at midnight. "What drivel! Ridiculous! I've been crossing in front of people all my life and nothing bad's ever happened to any of them!"

But Rufus wouldn't listen to reason. He'd rather lose his best and only pal than give up his worst superstition. The more he raved about how black cats scared him right out of his wits, the more Calvin tried to think of some way to prove to the rabbit how silly it was. Suddenly he realized that there was only one way to prove that superstitions are just a lot of hooey. . . .

"Rufus, I told you that I'm homeless because my family's new house is numbered 'eleven'. Well, listen—if I went home and lived there and nothing bad happened to me, would that show you that my biggest superstition was silly?"

"Sure!"

"And if my biggest superstition was proved ridiculous, then yours would be, too! Right?"

Rufus thought about it a moment and then agreed. "If you'll live in your new home a whole month, with no ill effects, then I'll give up my notions of black cats while you give up your notions of number elevens!"

Calvin lost no time in scooting home to 11 Hemlock Hill Drive. And just thirty happy days later a fluffy, white rabbit joined him on the hearth, where they laughed and laughed over how foolish they had once been over their superstitions!
